

STATUS OF BERTLING OFFICES

Last update: 16 September 2021

As expected, the coronavirus pandemic continues to soar across the globe and affects economies, companies and the lives of people in all countries while also having a profound impact on global supply chains and logistics.

Our operational divisions around the globe are heavily involved in supporting construction, mining, infrastructure, energy and other crucial manufacturing sectors, and therefore business must move on to ensure that global supply chains keep moving. Therefore, we are happy to inform that our global offices remain operational with our local experts being reachable via mobile and emails. Also going forward, we remain confident about our ability to service our worldwide customers – but still mainly on a virtual basis.

In doing so, all our corporate business travel restrictions for meetings, sales visits and events remain unchanged until further notice as well as regulations on hygiene, quarantine and sickness in line with local regulations and advice. While most of our employees continue to work from home or on rotation basis with others, we have created robust Covid-19-secure office environments for those employees, who are still required to go to the office to minimize potential exposure and to ensure the protection of our staff.
